

Easter Lily's
book of quotidian similes

Easter Lily's
book of quotidian similes

Well put together by Grandpa No-memory

Published by The Westhay Press

February 2016

On the anniversary of Easter Lily herself. De facto.

Now you are 1, Baby Esther
It is important to know some quotidian similes.

Quotidian means every day. That's how often you have breakfast.
Simile means saying that something is like something else.
Pretty much everything is like something else.
Blowing on your tummy is like farting.

We can say 'as'... 'as' instead of 'like'.

So:

Nimble like a thimble can also be

As nimble as a thimble.

Here goes anyway.

As stable as a table

As tippetty as a flimsy table with legs like a giraffe

As steady as a teddy

As toppling over as a tumble teddy

As fat as a cat

As round as an English pound or
As soun' as a poun'

As proud as a cloud

Now you must hasten like a basin

Sleep like a sheep

And as well as a bell

Night night baby Esterhazy.

I one.